

Gloria Greene—Assistant Editor

Susan Hemphill—Editor

Foreword

According to the ancient Greek, man's life was ruled by the Fates, and there was no escape from a planned destiny. Although we owe much of our culture and governmental ideas to these intellectual giants of the past, we must conclude that man molds much of his own future through free choice. Man questions, decides, acts, and evaluates. He then must take the responsibility for his decisions.

This book is a pictorial record of the young people of Kermit High School. Its purpose is to capture the reality of past experience and to provide a reminder of the joys, the sorrows, the expectations, the successes, and the failures that are a part of every student's life. However, its purpose is not wholly grounded in the past; it points to a future that will be determined to a great extent by individual choice and not by the mystical Fates of Greek mythology.

Bill Barsch

CLASSES

Atalanta