

Serving in an educational capacity for forty-one years requires tremendous optimism, and Mr. Thompson is an optimist. He believes that in waging the warfare of life, it is not the weapon that counts, but the man who wields the weapon. He knows that it matters little whether one comes to the conflict clad in the golden livery of a king or wearing the rags of poverty; but it matters tremendously that one comes with a heart that dares the fight and with a will that never accepts defeat.

Mr. G. E. Thompson is just such a man.
