

Money For This . . . Everything Seems To Cost

"So many things to buy and I just don't have enough money!" These words rang through the halls day after day as the seniors desperately tried to scrape up enough money to buy all the senior "goodies". Many don't realize how expensive it is to be a senior. By the time you buy senior shirts, invitations, thank-you cards, name cards, memory books, yearbooks, pictures and rent caps and gowns, you have spent every penny you once had.

But hey, isn't it worth it? These are the things you've spent twelve years working for. Your highschool days are the ones you will remember for the rest of your life.

Excited about graduation day, the seniors count down every month, week, day, hour, minute, and second left until they are finally on their own.

To many of the seniors "being on their own" was something to really look forward to. It was their chance to really be themselves, a chance to just cut loose and run free.

Graduation is a time when the seniors begin to see that they must fight for themselves, stand up for what they believe and make some very difficult choices concerning their future.

As senior Michelle Dehart put it, "Graduation is the ending phase between yesterday and tomorrow."

Nothing can compare to the senior class of 1988, they were a unique blend of leaders. They were fun-loving and very spirited people. They were a class of individualists and yet they were a whole. For the most part they were looked up to by the other kids in school simply because they were seniors.

Being a senior is a hard job. You kind-of had a set standard to live up to. Most people consider seniors to be the smartest, most out-going, "perfect" people in the world. That's a lot of responsibility, but these seniors did their best to be good examples for the rest of us.

Money For That When Senior Year Arrives

In the classrooms of KHS you are likely to see seniors of all sorts. Some are alert and attentive, others are lazy and in a daze. Which ever the case may be, they all have one thing on their mind . . . 3:40 P.M. . . . school's out!

As the bell rings each student lets out a sigh of relief that they have made it through yet another day of high school. But what is the day like after school?

Some seniors have jobs they must report to, others attend practice for different sports. Those who aren't involved in after school activities just go home and relax, grab a snack and start on their homework.

On one hand being a senior is an exciting time, in fact one of the most joyful times in your life. You've waited 12 years to be a senior and now that you're there you might as well do all you can to make it fun.

Now on the other hand, being a senior may be a time for looking back and remembering what used to be. Many get depressed because they think of being in a new town, starting a new life and leaving behind their old friends.

These thoughts shouldn't bring us down, they should encourage us because of all the new experiences we will encounter.

Reaching goals and fulfilling dreams are just two of the many things that seniors have on their minds.

They continue to send off for college information and slowly start working out details and preparing everything for college life.

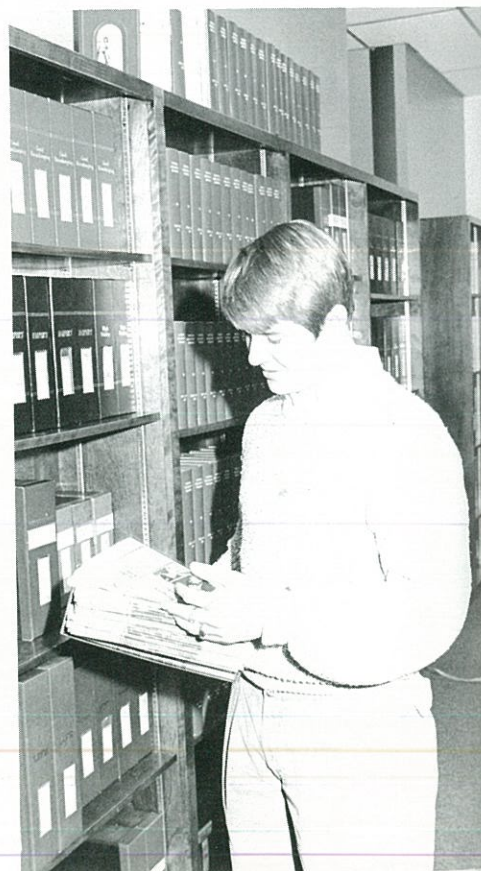

The seniors are beginning to realize that they are getting older and must learn to make decisions for themselves. The decisions they make will be ones that will greatly influence the coming days . . . and years. But of course our seniors were able to handle the situation rather well.

To all the graduating seniors of 1988, thanks for making this a year that we will always remember.

Crazy seniors are stacking up everywhere. Take for instance BOTTOM Fatima Dominquez, Sarah Lackey, Selina Guerra. TOP Corina Dominquez, and Jamie Long.

Working hard on his library duties is Donnie Tankersley.

Ladies and gentlemen . . . Seniors of 1988.
