Reminiscences of School Life

From my peaked dome I have stood at the window and gazed down on you for two years; you do not know me so why worry about the contents of this reminiscence—for it is merely memories that fly through my mind. I have watched certain students who before the morning bell had rung were eagerly awaiting the opening of the door—who, when classes began, with all interest of the intellectual group, listened with receptive minds to the teachings of some learned man—who when testing time came were not found wanting, but with that brilliant smile and courageous look said, "Come what may—I have worked and I shall not fail." Then I have watched those students walk out of the school at the end of the term with the dignity of well trained citizens. Again from my window I have seen the stranger—but the sun has set and it grows too dark to write the doom of those students.
