

SAND

Four o'clock has come and the buses of the school children have each gone through cracked sandy roads to various oil camps. The sky is clear, but far in the west a sheer veil seems to cover the sun, making tiny jewels appear between you and the blue canopy. All is quiet and still as if some prayer were being raised. Then puff! You look somewhat surprised, for a gust of wind and a fog of sand were not expected by your poor astonished left cheek. Another blast of wind brings with it what seems the whole terra firma rushing in to catch the other gust. To the left of you, to the right of you, in front of you, and behind you comes that "respector of no person"—the sand. It hits, it blows, it scratches, and last but not least it arouses your anger to the point of "forgetfulness," and you indignantly say, "Deliver me from this!" A year has passed; the sand still flies, the wind still blows—and you are still here—happy in your sandy West Texas home!

Hight's

The Friendly Store

Quality Goods at Popular Prices
Dry Goods, Ready-to-Wear and Shoes

Jay's Grocery & Market

A Complete Line of Fresh Meats and Groceries

"With the Quality that Counts"

Miss Riddles (in fourth year English class): "Well, you need not fuss because in the future everything is going to be worked by contract."

Charles (in distraction): "My poor children."

L. M. Prater

District Gulf Refining and Products

Phone 38

G. F. Wachter's Stores

A Complete Line of Notions,
School Supplies and Home
Necessities