SUPERINTENDENT'S MESSAGE

When our forefathers established our form of government, they wisely foresaw that its survival depended on an enlightened and educated citizenship. They therefore established a system of public schools. American "know-how" and ability to out-produce the world in material is clear proof of the fact that these schools have done a good job. Today the American people are the best educated of any people in the world. My admonition to the students and graduates of today is to be concerned with keeping our free and democratic schools open and thus insure America's future.

R. A. Lipscomb
