

When All is Said and Done

Jeffrey Watts lets Merrick Brown get a quick smooch from his pony.

Wearing rainbow hair and an oversized bow, second grader Lacy Morton enjoys the Halloween carnival.

Shane Haynes and Kristy Northcutt are a familiar sight in the high school hallway between classes.

Junior PAL Micha Roundtree is surrounded by his well-wishers before a Friday ball game.

Getting involved was all in a day's work for Wink students. Planning Homecoming activities, pep rallies, dress-up days, and special club projects didn't leave much idle time for busy students.

Six PALS (Peer Assisted Learning) in a new class, worked to establish a rapport and be a role model for elementary students.

Cheerleaders and Student Council members worked to plan special themes to liven up the school days, to promote spirit and to give students something to think about.

A special AIDS assembly preceded by a "sharing" activity of exchanging candy aimed at educating students, took planning to make a successful statement.

Red ribbon week and theme days, sponsored by the Council, reminded students of the dead-end offered by drugs and alcohol. Planning and preparing concerts, carnival booths, concessions, the hayride and dances all took enthusiasm and involvement by sponsors and students.

School boring? Who had time to even answer that question? ENOUGH SAID!

Sophomores Karina Carrillo and Geta Wilson wait for the kindergarteners to parade through the high school hall on Halloween.

Cheerleader sponsor Chrissie Ethridge smiles in relief as the Homecoming pep rally comes to an end.

Student Council member Shannon Parham poses with her teddy bear on "Drugs are Un-Bearable" day.