

Being prepared for 'Life on the Edge' requires planning

Taking Care of Business

The study of British literature may not be the top item on the 'want to do list', but Coach Danna Flatt enlivens her English IV class by assigning students to create individual family shields in conjunction with the study of Beowulf. LaVenda Bingham and Angela Milligan enjoy taking this project seriously.

Juniors April Underwood and Jessica Ancira participate in the fun of 'hat day' during spirit week. But, when time for their distance learning class rolls around, they are the picture of conscientious students.

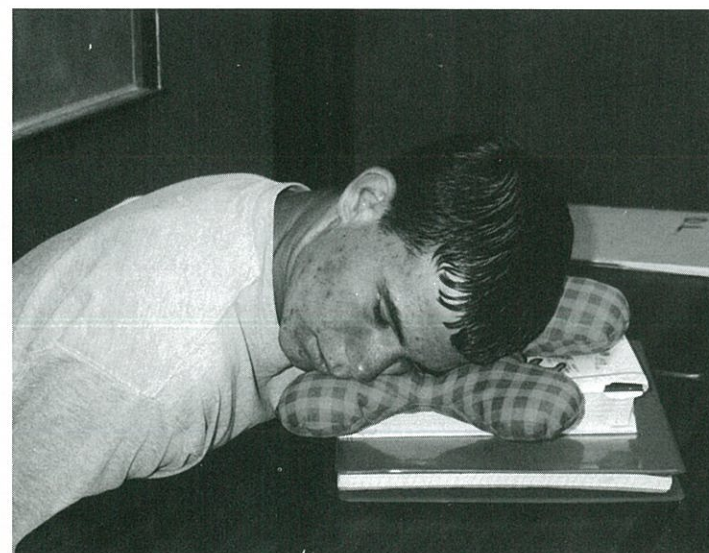

Steaven Grubbs, Kathie Shirey and Kenna Claborn work together to get precise measurements for a formula in chemistry lab.

Senior Shawn Glenn prepares to chow down on a steak students in wood shop prepared.

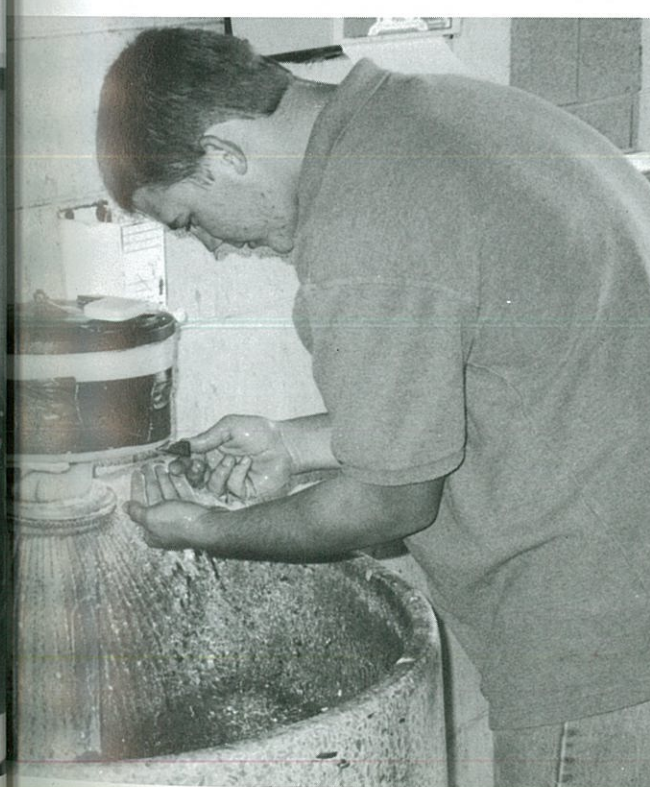

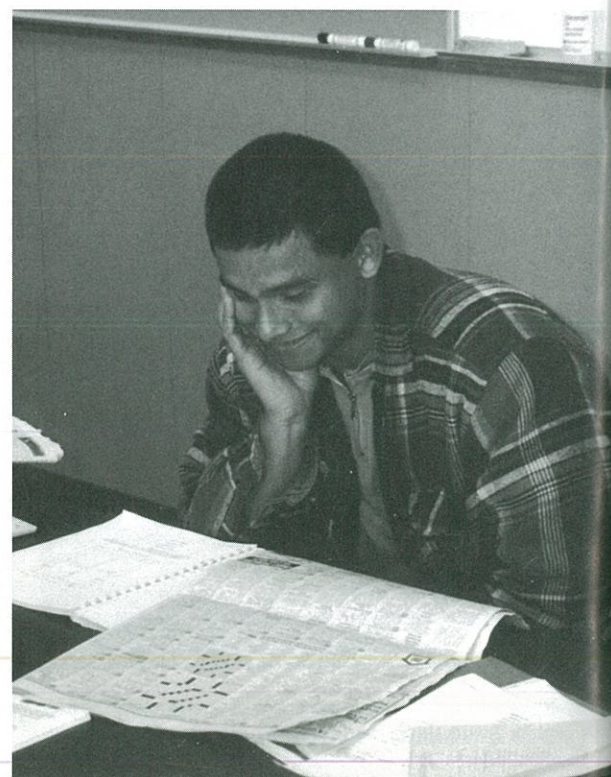

Juniors Mandi and Marci McCallister, Danni White, Crystal Smith and Sam Haring leave for a day of Winkler County junior leadership training. During the year these students sharpen their civic responsibility skills for future community involvement.

After returning late from a basketball road trip and then arising early for work in the weight room, Jared Green's most pressing business is catching a brief nap.

Senior Adrian Hernandez, perhaps dreaming of an 'after-graduation' bachelor's pad, scans the classified section.

Long bus trips require following a strict packing routine. Shane Jones knows, that for a successful trip, plenty of snacks, a pillow and blanket, and just the right music are necessities.

Before leaving his small engine repair class, John Allen Henderson cleans up and gets ready for his next class.
