“As the year 2000 approaches, I see Wink surviving yet another oil crisis, and property values will go up again. There will however be a slow steady decline over time as the oil and gas reserves are depleted. Life in Wink will always be at a slower pace than in the larger cities, but just as radio, television, and microwaves changed lifestyles in the past fifty years, computers, robotics, and laser technology will shape our future. The void left by changes in the petroleum industry, will be filled with technology such as distance learning and working by computer for far away companies. The Wink Schools will continue to offer the highest quality of education with an emphasis on continuous learning and technology training. I encourage Wink students to be flexible. In your lifetime, you will probably need to be retrained in technology over, and over again, to keep up with the rapidly changing world.”
